windeln.de, the German online retailer and flash sales platform for baby and children products (the “Company”), today announced that a consortium led by Goldman Sachs and Deutsche Bank invested €45 million in the Company. The investment comes to support the Company’s plans for strategic expansions and is intended to finance:

- The expansion of the Company’s product portfolio
- The Company’s geographic roll-out
- Potential acquisitions

“2014 has been a great year for windeln.de with gross revenue of €130 million”, said Alexander Brand, Managing Director and Co-Founder of windeln.de. “After a year in which we were able to almost double our gross revenues, we are even more delighted to welcome Goldman Sachs as a new shareholder. We consider this as a clear vote of confidence in our vision and strategic plans by a world-class investor. As we continue to grow, windeln.de will benefit from Goldman Sachs’ financing expertise and knowledge of key geographies and end markets.”

Martin Hintze, Managing Director and Co-head of Corporate Equity Investing in Europe of Goldman Sachs Merchant Banking Division, said: “windeln.de is an emerging European leader in the pure-play online retail of baby products. We believe that consumers will continue to move away from offline to online and we share the management team's vision to grow the business in the German-speaking region and beyond. This investment is a good example of our growth capital investment strategy of backing first-rate entrepreneurs. We look forward to assisting the Company in its further evolution." As part of the funding round, David Reis, Executive Director and Head of Technology Investments at Goldman Sachs Merchant Banking Division in Europe, will join the Advisory Board of windeln.de.

The investment round experienced broad participation from the Company's existing investor base including Deutsche Bank, DN Capital, MCI Management and 360 Capital Partners. "windeln.de has continued its impressive track record, with very high customer satisfaction," said Francesco Rigamonti, Director at Deutsche Bank.

Konstantin Urban, Managing Director and Co-Founder of windeln.de, summarized the funding round as follows: "We are particularly happy that also DN Capital, one of our earliest investors, participated in this funding round - renewing their commitment to windeln.de and our growth strategy."

"We see that the online share of daily consumption baby products is rising fast and that windeln.de is well perceived, especially by German consumers," said Dr. Georg Janssen, Partner at OC&C Strategy Consultants, who has analyzed the European baby products market on behalf of Goldman Sachs.

Headquartered in Munich, Germany, windeln.de has seen consistent success and strong growth since launching in 2010. Company milestones include:
